August 2016[A randomized controlled trial comparing ampicillin plus gentamicin and cefotaxime plus metronidazole in empirical therapy of peri-implant infections in periodontitis patients]. Peri-implant infections are the most common complication of endosseous implants. There is a lack of evidence to guide the management of patients with peri-implant infections. The aim of this study was to compare the effectiveness of ampicillin and gentamicin and cefotaxime and metronidazole, used in empirical therapy of peri-implant infections. A randomized controlled trial was conducted in patients with a peri-implant infection. Infections were divided into two groups: the control group, who received ampicillin and gentamicin, and the treatment group, who received cefotaxime and metronidazole. We included 41 patients in the study. The overall success rate was 69.5% (11/16) in the ampicillin group and 61.9% (10/16) in the cefotaxime group ($p=0.569$). The success rate was 75% (12/16) in the ampicillin group and 63.6% (10/16) in the cefotaxime group in the presence of staphylococci ($p=0.467$). The success rate in the ampicillin group was 72.7% (7/9) in the group with non-inflammatory peri-implant diseases and 55.6% (6/11) in the group with inflammatory diseases ($p=0.577$). In the presence of anaerobic bacteria, the success rate in the ampicillin group was 66.7% (6/9) and 50% (6/12) in the cefotaxime group ($p=0.606$). In conclusion, the success rate of empirical antibiotic therapy was similar in both groups. However, in the presence of staphylococci, the treatment was more effective in the ampicillin group. There was no significant difference in the treatment efficacy between ampicillin and cefotaxime in the presence of non-inflammatory and inflammatory peri-implant diseases.Q: Q: What good is a logarithmically-curved horizon?
